IF you’re unhappy with your looks but not sure a full-scale facelift or nose job is for you, non-surgical procedures are on the rise.

Fabulous' Editor Sinead McIntyre, 44, tests out one of the most popular new 'tweakments': The Botox pen.

Botox is super popular with celebs like Chloe Sims, but the Botox pen could soon become more popular than its traditional equivalent

Like the idea of Botox but don't want to look like a deer caught in headlights? Juvapen is the answer.

Unlike traditional needles, where practitioners control the dosage and may use too much, they can set this mini-motorised syringe to the exact required dose of Botox, which achieves a more natural look.

“The tool allows lines to be softened while maintaining movement in the face,” says Dr Jules Nabet.

Injecting Botox is an art form, and some practitioners are better than others – bad Botox is the kind that you notice, whereas Juvapen’s is almost undetectable.

But the benefits don’t end there – it’s also 50% less painful, because the needle is smaller, and you’re less likely to bruise, too.
